CERTIFICATION

IN CHOICE THEORY &

REALITY THERAPY

Certification

Certification is an opportunity to demonstrate knowledge and to expand one's learning. During the course of the week, each participant is involved in demonstration, self-evaluation, and feedback from his/her peers and instructor. Each participant is expected to demonstrate his/her skill in using Reality Therapy to deal with familiar and unfamiliar clients. Each participant is also expected to role-play as both helper and helpee.

Dr. Glasser's books, Choice Theory: A New Psychology of Personal Freedom and Counseling with Choice Theory: The New Reality Therapy are required reading prior to attendance at Certification, although familiarity with all of his books is encouraged. Of key importance is his booklet, Defining Mental Health as a Public Health Issue.

One of the requirements for completing Certification is a short 15-minute presentation to the small group of certification candidates. The purpose is to demonstrate the ability to teach, through involvement, an aspect of Choice Theory, Reality Therapy and Lead Management to a group of interested listeners. This presentation could reflect how the participant has used the principles in his/her work situation, how the principles have been implemented in his/her own personal life, or how he/she expects to teach the ideas to others. Effective presentations in the past have included innovations or ideas for colleagues' shared use, new applications, and reformulation of the principles. Commonalties of successful previous presentations are: involvement of group members; relevant, thought-provoking and well-timed ideas; accuracy in concepts; use of humor; and the use audio-visual aids such as handouts, posters, charts, PowerPoint and videos.

Personal testimonials are acceptable; however, the presentation itself should not be a "therapeutic event" for the presenter. The main goal of the presenter is to demonstrate knowledge of choice theory, reality therapy and lead-management in an interesting manner. The use of notes is acceptable, but the presentation should not be read verbatim. Presenters are encouraged, but not required, to write their presentation in a scholarly form. Most candidates bring additional copies of their presentations for each member of their working group.

As mentioned previously, to prepare for a successful presentation, candidates should practice and refine their presentations in consultation with their Advanced Practicum Supervisor. Participants are required to be in attendance during the entire week.

CT/RT Certification is the recognition by WGI and WGI-US that a person has completed the certification process and demonstrated knowledge and skill in Choice Theory, Reality Therapy, and Lead Management. Those completing the certification process are entitled to use the designation of "Choice Theory/Reality Therapy Certified" or "CT/RTC."

The use of the designation, "Certified Reality Therapist" is only appropriate where the individual is entitled, under the licensing laws of the jurisdiction in which he/she resides, to use the term "therapist." WGI-US does not confer this title upon anyone. Certification is not a license to practice counseling or psychotherapy. Again, the appropriate licensing authorities in the various states and territories of the US govern these practices. For the appropriate practice of counseling/psychotherapy, members of WGI-US should refer to the "Codes of Ethics" of the various professional organizations to which they belong and the licensing laws of the area(s) in which they practice. While CT/RTC individuals are encouraged to utilize and share Choice Theory concepts with others, the certification is not an endorsement to teach as a representative of WGI or WGI-US.
